

Introduction for Linda Swindling

To the introducer: Thank you for agreeing to introduce this session. You set the tone for the meeting with your enthusiasm and by showing that the speaker has earned the right to speak to this group. This introduction was written to help make your job easier. Feel free to revise any words that don't sound natural to you. Thank you again!

Introduction

Right now, at this very moment, are you negotiating a change you chose or one or more that were chosen for you?

Have you ever planned a clear course of action and then discovered all your hard work was no longer relevant?

What would happen if you and those around you could adapt to change ... without drama ... or mental exhaustion?

Well...good news.

Our speaker today is a negotiation expert who promises that whether your change was planned or a surprise, you have more control and options than you think. She literally wrote the books on how to positively negotiate workplace drama and how leaders can drive winning performance with everyone on their team.

Our speaker knows firsthand about negotiating change and drama from her experiences in the courtroom and in the boardroom. She is a coach to CEOs, a TEDx speaker, a Certified Speaking Professional, a mother of two...AND a "recovering" employment attorney.

It is my honor...our pleasure...to welcome Linda Swindling.
